Identity

Who you are and what you stand for.

1 How do you introduce yourself at a conference? (Not your bio. What you actually say.)

2 What do people come to you for? What's the question they always ask?

3 If you could only be known for one thing, what would it be?

Audience

Who you're trying to reach and what they need to hear.

4 Who are you trying to reach? (Be specific: titles, industries, decision-making level.)

5 What do they already believe before they encounter your content?

6 What do you want them to believe after?

7

What's the one thing they need to hear that nobody else is telling them?

Voice

How you sound when you're at your best.

8

Name 2-3 people whose communication style you admire. What specifically do you like about each?

9

What words or phrases do you use naturally that feel like "you"?

10

What words or phrases would feel fake coming out of your mouth? Think about AI-generated content or industry marketing. What makes you cringe?

11

When you explain something complicated, do you simplify it or trust your audience to keep up?

12

Are you more likely to take a clear position or present multiple perspectives and let the audience decide?

- 13 Do you tend to be more analytical, more narrative, or more direct?

Content & Boundaries

What you talk about, what you avoid, and how you want people to feel.

- 14 What topics could you talk about for 30 minutes without any preparation?

- 15 What topics do you avoid or feel uncomfortable with? Why?

- 16 Is there a tone you would never want your content to take? Something that would make you say "take that down"?

- 17 Do you prefer to teach, argue, analyze, or tell stories?

- 18 How do you want people to feel after consuming your content? (Not what you want them to know. How you want them to feel.)

19What's the one piece of content you wish you had already created?

You're done.

No charge. No pitch. Just clarity.

What happens next:

1. We read your answers before the call. No cold starts.
2. On the call, we ask follow-up questions to sharpen the picture.
3. You walk away with a clear sense of how your voice should show up across every platform.

If you want us to build the system that puts your voice to work, we'll talk about a Story Sprint. If not, you still keep everything from the call.

What makes this different:

This questionnaire captures who you are as a communicator. When you work with ClarityForge, we go deeper. We build a working voice document that powers every piece of content we produce for you. The result is content that sounds like you from day one.
